Read the article below. Look for words with the prefixes pre-, re-, post-, and co-.

We live in a world of pre- and re- and sometimes post- and often co-. In the morning, we eat breakfast that is precooked, so all we have to do is reheat it. We slip on prewashed T-shirts and preshrunk jeans that have been preapproved by siblings so we won't embarrass them. Before we even get out the door, the day is rearranged. Someone just recalled that she has to return a book to the library on the way to school. Dad remembers that he will have to pick up my little sister at preschool because Mom has a postseason coaches meeting.

The middle of the day isn't any different. We try to react politely when the class we pre-enrolled in is full. We are reassured that we will get the class in the fall. We recover from our disappointment. We are named co-captains of the soccer team. At about 3:30, we retrace our steps and rejoin the world.

After a quick snack, we set the table and precut vegetables for dinner. We preheat the oven and let the frozen meatloaf cook while we study. Cooperation is the key to getting things done right.

At our house, one of our favorite "posts" is the postprandial walk. Postprandial is a fancy way to say "after dinner." When we've finished, we're refreshed and recharged.
