Word Hunt

Read the passage below and look for frequently misspelled words.

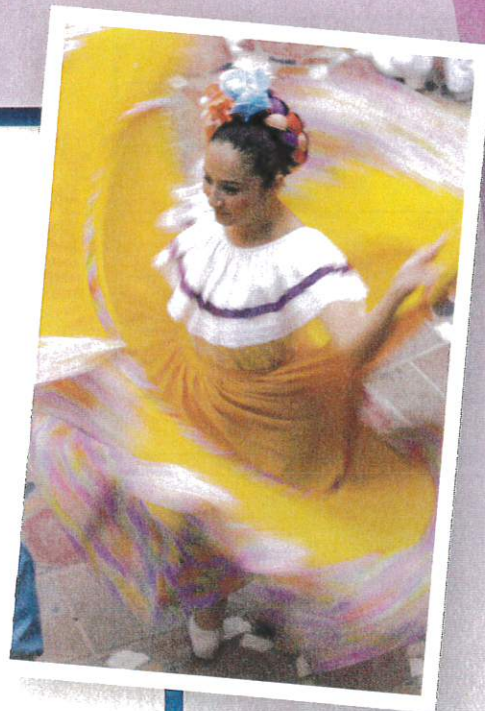

Many cities in the United States have an annual fair or festival to celebrate their rich diversity of cultures. If you have the chance to attend or participate in one of these festivals, you should definitely do it. You might be amazed by the unique sights, sounds, and flavors of many lands and people. You can see everything from the bizarre to the familiar.

Most international festivals offer exhilarating dance performances on numerous stages. Ebullient dancers and performers might also maneuver their way through the throngs of people, stopping occasionally for an impromptu performance.

Food is another big part of an international festival. Imagine being able to find authentic Szechuan chicken, leche flan, barbecue, curried lamb, fried rice, and tamales all in one building! It's a rendezvous of smells, colors, textures, and flavors. You could spend half the day just making your way through the labyrinth of people and food booths. Try a little of everything! It's all genuine and authentic.

Make your way to the arts and crafts exhibits, too. There you might watch an artisan demonstrate the procedure for creating a traditional craft. You might even be invited to try your hand at it.

Going to an international festival is almost like taking a quick trip around the world. Every performer, every cook, every artisan, and every visitor is an ambassador for his or her culture and a liason between cultures.
